The dresses of the married women is the same as that of the girls, only better worked. They wear trousers; and, instead of stockings, wrap their legs in linen rags; their shoes are made of the bark of trees, cut into strips, and matted. In the summer season they wear nothing over their shift; which is not put into the trousers, but hangs over them all round. This shift is clove at the neck and the wrists, cut into shape, and comes down to the knees. The neck, the wristbands, and all the seams, are covered with whimsical embroidery of different-coloured woad; a large buckle holds it together at the bosom, and a girdle round the waist. When they would be more dressed than ordinary, they put over this shift a habit like a morning gown, made of various-coloured cloths, and tolerably fine; to this latter they generally give an edging of beaver. Their caps are very high, and in the shape of a cone; they call them fhourki, and make them of the bark of birch, covered with skin or linen, adorned with glass-beads, little white shells, and small silver money. From Haybands are often used for this purpose, when they go on horseback in the winter. But the linen jags are their common wear; and are tied on, to keep them from unwrapping, by a rum, or piece of packthread, passed several times round the calf of the...
