THE DHAMMAPADA TV/TORE people delight in proverbs than one would suppose. You will be surprised to find how many persons copy in their commonplace book, or hang upon their wall by the mirror or over the desk, certain pithy apothegms that strike their fancy. For their benefit let me here give some sayings that are found in the Dhammapada, or Verses of Teaching. They represent pretty faithfully the doctrine of Buddha, but their high ethical value will be appreciated by the West. It may be well for us to chew these Oriental bits of wisdom thoughtfully, and we may, so doing, realize what has been said of them, a little thereof saves from much sorrow. According to Buddha, the sources of sorrow are three: craving, ill-will (or hate), and delusion (or ignorance). As rain gets into an ill-thatched house, so craving gets into an ill-trained mind. If a man hates, suffering follows him close, as the wheel follows the hoof of the beast that draws the cart. If a man talks much about the truth, but acts not in accordance with it, he is but little better than the cowherd who counts the cattle of others. What more striking picture have you seen than this, of the dilettante who is as one that counts other people's cattle? The man who is vigilant over himself makes to himself an island that no flood can overwhelm. The one who has attained self-mastery has ascended...
